Musicians sound warning over cost of living and Brexit

Fyfe says: “Being able to get a good gauge of where people are in their careers and their needs will help both the Musicians’ Union and musicians.

“They can re-evaluate how they’re supporting musicians – for example they might find they need more mental health resources.

“Help Musicians have got a thing called Music Minds Matter, it’s kind of The Samaritans for musicians because we know that sometimes musicians can have quite different issues, the peaks and troughs are probably higher and lower than the average person who works in a different industry.

“I think this census is incredibly important for anyone who works semi-professionally, professionally to fill in so our organisations can represent us better.

“The work the Musicians’ Union have done over the pandemic has been incredible, and over the Brexit negotiations as well. I’m a very proud union member.”

South London could ‘lose entire generation of musical talent’

The cost-of-living crisis could cost South London an “entire generation” of musicians as many can no longer afford to live in the capital.

The stark warning comes from Music Union committee member Hailey Williamson, as the organisation launches its Musicians’ Census – a first in the UK.

The nationwide census for musicians will help the industry understand the “experiences of musicians and the issues facing them”.

“So many friends and colleagues have already been pushed out of the city,” said Hailey, 31, who lives near Croydon hospital with her husband who is also a musician.

Wednesday

We start the day in the Barbican and then walk down the road stopping at the food market to LSO St. Luke's. We're rehearsing the Sibelius Violin Concerto with Janine Janson and since she's one of my absolute favourite musicians, I'm thrilled she's back with us. We're all in heaven hearing her play and post-rehearsal I'm getting ready for the filming downstairs when she passes by, so we have a chat about a mutual close friend. I think the filming goes well, albeit with the usual fits of laughter and swearing at times! The digital team seems happy and I record a few promos for the forthcoming Donatella Flick Conducting competition whilst I'm there. I head for home but spot some friends in a cafe so stop to have a chat. It's Burns' Night and I have arranged to have dinner with two lovely LSO patrons who have become close friends. We eat the most amazing food and have an interesting chat. One of them is also heavily involved in DEI at his law firm, so I mention the work that the Musicians Census is doing for musicians. A violinist starts playing Scottish reels right behind me and I hope my upper back violin inspired tattoo is not putting him off!

King's Coronation musicians threaten to snub event in reaction to BBC's arts cuts

Now, the Musicians' Union, which supports more than 32,000 musicians across the country, said every option will be considered in attempting to stop the plans from being executed.

Its general secretary, Naomi Pohl, told the Telegraph that the King's Coronation, which is less than seven weeks away, and the BBC Proms which begin in July, could be targeted by strikes.

Ms Pohl said that the union still had "some form of collective action" if the BBC maintains its position on mass redundancies on the table.

Maestros in uproar over BBC's classical music cuts

Naomi Pohl, general secretary of the Musicians' Union, said she was hopeful the BBC would reconsider. "I think they'll have been surprised at the extent of the reaction."

Pohl noted that the Singers had a relatively small budget. "It's got a fantastic reputation, including for performing new work."

Hunt extends tax reliefs for cultural organisations

Naomi Pohl, general secretary of the Musicians' Union, said the body was “grateful that the government has listened” to calls to extend the tax relief.

Evening Standard

The Musicians' Union (MU), which lobbied for the rates extension, also welcomed the announcement as a “vital lifeline”.

General secretary Naomi Pohl said: “We are grateful that the Government has listened to the MU and others in the creative sectors and extended the higher rate of tax relief for theatres and orchestras for another two years.

“The cuts announced to the BBC Orchestras and Singers last week, along with those brought in by Arts Council England in the autumn, are a stark reminder of the difficulties currently being faced by arts organisations, so this extra injection of cash is a vital lifeline for an incredibly successful sector.”

Music Week

“We hope that the money provided by this extension of tax relief does filter down to the musicians, performers and other creatives”
